

As with post-9/11 airport security, there is nothing to do but sigh and comply, or risk being banned from the Internet altogether.

* Correction: 37th Salish Conference
^^

The July issue of the SSILA Newsletter, which is reaching many of you this week, gives (in "Regional Networks") an erroneous date and place for the upcoming 37th International Conference on Salish and Neighboring Languages. The correct date is August 14-16, and the meeting will take place on the campus of Western Washington University, in Bellingham. Further information (including accommodations) is posted at the ICSNL website:

<http://www.wwu.edu/~denham/icsnl37>

We regret the error, and apologize to Kristin Denham and Mercedes Hinkson, the organizers of this year's ICSNL, for the consternation we may have caused by our sloppy editing.

* Website shift delayed a few more days
^^

Please bear with us for a few more days while we deal with what we hope are the last few problems that are delaying the move of <www.ssila.org> to its new and thoroughly updated site. Shouldn't be long!

172.1 Special Issue of Canadian Journal of Native Education

>From Daghida (daghida@ualberta.ca) 29 Jul 2002:

The UBC First Nations House of Learning is pleased to announce a cooperative editorship for the Spring/Summer 2003 edition of the Canadian Journal of Native Education, which will have the theme "Advancing Aboriginal languages and literacy." The co-editors will be:

Jo-ann Archibald, University of British Columbia
Eileen Antone, OISE, University of Toronto
Heather Blair, University of Alberta

We encourage Aboriginal/Indigenous educators and community language and literacy educators to contribute articles that focus on advancing Aboriginal languages and literacy. Submissions may include both language and literacy as topics, or may emphasize only one of them. Submissions that examine either local or global contexts will be considered.

We are interested in Aboriginal/Indigenous perspectives and culturally appropriate ways of thinking, teaching, and learning. We want to hear about innovative research, programs, strategies and efforts that advance

Aboriginal languages and literacy development. For example, how do literacy training programs use holistic approaches to learning? Submissions may be presented as stories, vignettes, reflections, critical essays, and research articles.

Please send four titled hard copies with abstract (one with your name and contact address, three without for blind review) to:

2003 Theme Edition
Canadian Journal of Native Education
First Nations House of Learning
1985 West Mall
University of British Columbia
Vancouver BC, V6T 1Z2

CJNE uses APA style. Submissions should be no longer than 6,250 words. Deadline for submissions: September 15, 2002.

172.4 Websites of Interest

* Karuk Language Resources on the Web

From Susan Smith (susans@sisnet.ssku.k12.ca.us) 29 Jul 2002:

We are pleased to announce the successful launching of a new website, "Karuk Language Resources on the Web." The address is:

<http://www.karuk.org/>

The site was designed by a team of students from Happy Camp High School together with Diane Oliver, their Advanced Multimedia Technologies teacher, and Susan Smith, a student and teacher of the Karuk language and a member of the Karuk Language Restoration Committee.

"Karuk Language Resources on the Web" incorporates an older Karuk website that was designed by the Karuk Language class of Hoopa Valley High School in 1999.

Visitors to the site will find a home page with links to both the Hoopa HS and Happy Camp HS language pages. There are also links to other Karuk language sites and to sites of more general interest to students of Karuk culture.
